PREFACE

Sumter County, as it is known today, belonged to the Choctaw Indian Nation until the consummation of the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek September 1830. By 1832 the removal of the Indians to Oklahoma was completed and white settlers poured into the three quarters of a million acres which constituted the territory. Within a short time every section of land was either patented or homesteaded by people from New England, every state on the Atlantic Seaboard and the Middle West. In 1843 some of the land belonging to Sumter County was given to a new county, Choctaw, which was just south of Sumter.

By 1840 a wave of the first settlers of Sumter County began their migration West; another wave of migrants from the East took their places. This kept up until just before the Civil War. At that time the plantations began to get larger as those going West sold out to those who wished to stay here. Today Sumter County is small in population and has large landholders.

The "SUMTER COUNTY JOURNAL", our newspaper published at York, Alabama, goes to every state in the Union and many foreign countries - which fact shows where Sumter's sons and daughters now live.

In doing research for people all over the United States, I found it very hard to find, in the books prior to the Civil War, the information I wanted as there was so much "hidden genealogy" in these Settlements of Estate Books. For instance, sometimes the index would show the administrator's name or the guardian's name instead of the deceased or his family. I decided to abstract these books and index them by each name; this volume is the first one I have completed. I hope that my efforts will help many of you in your search for your "missing links". Other volumes will follow as I complete the abstracting.

WASHINGTON PRECINCT
Hall Line
1841

This election was held at the home of H. Whitrip. Washington's Store was between Old Gaston and the Mississippi State Line, near what is now called Ward. Several of those men were large land owners. Pleasant White came from Greene County, Archibald Hall from Perry or Hale County; both men were large land owners, as were the Fallaces. John Grice removed to Old Ramsey Section.
